GLASTONBURY ABBEY.

"Or in ſome mighty ruin's ſolemn ſhade."
YOUNG, Night II.

NOW, mark where yonder noble ruin ſtands
Frowning in ſilent grandeur.
Th'embattled turrets, half decay'd,
And overgrown with ivy, riſe ſtupendous;
Whilſt the ponderous walls
Faſt moulder, ſpite of maſſy buttreſs.
Draw near; ſurvey the antient edifice,
Where once the voice of harmony divine
Was heard to echo by the liſt'ning wall;
There now the piercing winds terrific howl,
And the fierce ſtorm in pelting drops deſcends;
Where once the tinkling bell toll'd ſolemnly,
And ſummon'd all that ſlept to midnight prayer;
There now the moping owl ſcreams mournfully,
And the hoarſe raven anſwers from the tower:
Where once the holy men were wont to kneel,
And abſolution claim for all their ſins,
Now noxious weeds take root and flouriſh wild;
The prickly thiſtle, and the nettle ſharp,
That oft impede the Antiquary's way:
Where once the painted glaſs was wont to deck
The Gothic caſement, now the ivy twines,
Dull ſolitary plant, that loves to climb
The tott'ring walls, or ſcale the ruin'd tower.
Here do I love to wander; here the mind,
Abſtracted from the world's anxieties,
Has time to ponder on its various ſcenes,
So chequer'd o'er with pleaſure and with pain.
The head that plann'd, the ſkilful hands that rear'd,
The mighty edifice, now moulder to decay,
As does the edifice itſelf.
Nor are th'inhabitants exempt; they long
Ago have paid the debt to nature due;
And now they mingle with their native duſt;
Scarce does a veſtige of them now remain,
To tell they once exiſted, ſave that here
And there a monumental ſtone, worn ſmooth,
Records th' uncertain date of human things,
And ſeems to ſay "Prepare to meet thy God."
